

Cohesive and non-cohesive sediments

Non-cohesive sediments lack the physicochemical interactions that exist between clay particles and so are free to move independently.

The critical shear stresses required to set non-cohesive sediments in motion decrease with decreasing particle size.

Sediment erosion/transport/deposition relationship between averaged grain size and averaged current speed required to erode them

